

Non-secular Environmental Resources

Environmental Initiative of the Diocese of Maryland: The EIS Committee will be the successor to and expand the work of the former Committee on the Environment. As this Web site expands it will include environmental education tools and information on conducting environmental audits of parishes, and provide leadership for larger Episcopal and interfaith communities.

<http://www.ang-md.org/environment/index.php>

The Web of Creation: established to foster the movement for personal and social transformation to a just and sustainable world from religious perspectives. To that end, the information at this site will:

- connect you with ideas, resources and strategies for doing eco-justice
- inform, inspire, encourage, educate you about eco-justice
- support you in your efforts to live, work and pray in ways that promote eco-justice

The Web of Creation has also been developed to provide information and connections for theology students interested in environmental ministry.

<http://www.webofcreation.org>

The Episcopal Ecological Network (EpEN): a nationwide network within the Episcopal Church that coordinates with the Peace and Justice Ministries Office of the Episcopal Church. This network is part of the worldwide Anglican Communion with roots in the Celtic Spirituality of this tradition. The EpEN includes all concerned Episcopalians who are helping the Church assume a leadership role in the worldwide environmental movement, just as the Church leads in other peace and justice issues.

www.eenonline.org

The Eco-Justice Program office of the National Council of Churches: works in cooperation with the NCC Eco-Justice Working Group to provide an opportunity for the national bodies of member Protestant and Orthodox denominations to work together to protect and restore God's Creation.

<http://nccecojustice.org/>